Birthday parties –if your dog is at day care on their birthday – let the staff know – so we can have a paw-ty!

During the holidays, it is very tempting to want to “treat” our pets to something special such as gravy, turkey drippings and table food. These high fat foods can cause diarrhea, vomiting and overload the pet’s digestive system. Many small pets, especially, can be adversely affected from what might seem, is a tiny piece of a holiday dinner.

It is quite common for emergency animal clinics to be filled with dogs and cats suffering from a severe bout of pancreatitis during the holidays. Giving pets table scraps such as fat from meat, cooked bones, turkey drippings and gravy, even in small amounts, can make them sick. Pet owners and doting relatives who overindulge the pet in holiday food are not only causing a change in the pet’s diet (which can make them sick on its own) but combining that with high fat foods can lead to serious, sometimes even fatal consequences.

If you really want to give your pet an extra snack, then please plan ahead. Keep safe treats such as your pet’s favorite treat available or consider having fresh vegetables (steamed or raw), a piece of baked yam or a small piece of LEAN meat set aside. Show family members the "safe" treats for your pet and have an appropriate amount clearly displayed in a special dish. Once the treats run out, be sure the "treating" stops.

Dangerous Foods For Pets

The following foods can be dangerous to pets:

- * Chocolate
- * Grapes or raisins
- * Onions (cooked or raw)
- * Sweets (cookies, cake, ice cream, etc.)
- * Rolls/bread (many pets are allergic to gluten)
- * High fat foods such as butter, gravy or drippings
- * Cooked bones (they can cause choking and tearing in the GI tract)

Please make safety your #1 priority:

- 1) Keep pets in a designated part of your home if guests come over so that they can't get loose when the door opens
- 2) Don't leave pet alone in a room when candles are burning
- 3) Plan ahead if you want to give them some special treats
- 4) Play and exercise with your pet before guests arrive

Welcome to all the new members of ODDC. It is so much fun to have your baby join the pack.

REMEMBER: If you have any training issues – Speak to Chris Barretto for one on one training sessions.
